POPULATION ESTIMATES OF AUTONOMOUS AND
ADMINISTRATIVE REGIONS, AWRAJAS
AND TOWNS - 1989

Introduction

This report presents the May 1989 population size estimates of five autonomous regions, twenty five administrative regions, 356 awrajas and their towns according to the new administrative division of the country.

The report includes:

- population size estimates of autonomous and administrative regions during the five years from 1989 to 1994 (Tables 1-5).
- estimates of population densities of the regions in 1989 (Table 6).
- Estimates of population sizes of awrajas and towns in 1989 (Tables 7-36).

The report is presented both in Amharic and English to cater to a wide range of users. The major source of data for this report is the May 1984 Population and Housing Census, hereafter referred to as the census. The Central Statistical Authority (CSA) has produced other reports that presented the census figures (Ethiopia - 1984, Population and Housing Census Preliminary Report, Sept. 1984; Census Supplement 1, 1985) which made use of information obtained from the preliminary census results. Since then the computer processing of the census data of all regions has been completed. The results obtained are considered as final and this report makes use of these results. The population figures in the final and preliminary census results showed variation for some administrative areas. However, the population figures given in the final census results are considered as more accurate and in such cases it should replace the figures given in the preliminary census results.

For nomadic areas and other areas that were not covered in the census, population figures obtained from listing of households and household members undertaken during the census cartographic work were utilized. In cases where estimates were not available from the above sources estimates obtained from previous surveys and other sources which were compiled in CSO publication (Census Supplement 1 Dec. 1985) were used. Moreover, for some other areas, population figures obtained from other sources were utilized. Hence in this report, the 1984 population estimate that is considered as a base is obtained mainly from the final census result supplemented with the other sources of information mentioned above.

In order to obtain the population estimates for 1989, the 1984 estimates had to be raised by using weights. These weights were 1.147 for rural areas and 1.219 for urban areas and were derived from population projections (Census Supplement 1, Dec. 1985). Similar weights were constructed to multiply the 1989 rural and urban population figures of each region to obtain population estimates for the four years from 1990 to 1993. Population estimates for awrajas and towns are presented only for 1989, and persons who are interested may use these weights to raise the 1989 figures of each awraja or town to obtain estimates for the years 1990-1993. For example to obtain the population size estimate of an awraja in 1991, the 1989 rural population size of the awraja will be multiplied by 1.057 while the 1989 population size of its towns will be multiplied by 1.084. The total awraja population size will be obtained by adding these results.

In this report, all the regions and the awrajas within the regions are presented alphabetically, except for Addis Ababa Region, which was decided to appear next to Eastern Shewa. The terms northern, eastern, southern, and western, which are translations of the Amharic words, "Semien", "misrak", "debub", and "merab", respectively, were not considered during the alphabetical listing.

The report presents population size estimates of towns by sex. Most of these towns were considered to be urban centers at the time of the census and were covered using urban census questionnaires. Some urban centers (mainly in Eritrea and the Ogaden) were not covered in the census. For some of these towns population estimates were obtained from other CSO publication (Census Supplement 1, 1985). However, for some of the towns that were not covered in the census, no population estimates were available and as a result population estimates of such towns are given with the total population of their respective awraja. This report presents population estimates of 685 towns, of which 670 were covered during the census and 15 had estimates from other sources. However, of these 685 towns the Ministry of Housing and Urban Development recognizes only 322 towns as urban and a list of these towns can be obtained from the annual Statistical Abstracts produced by the Central Statistical Authority.

According to the definition used during the census, an urban center was defined to be a locality that had a population size of 2000 or more; was recognized to be urban by the Ministry of Housing and Urban Development, and/or was a seat of Wereda Administration. Areas that did not satisfy the above criteria were identified to be rural and were included with the surrounding rural areas. However, five years have elapsed since the undertaking of the census, and some more areas may now satisfy the urban definition criteria. Changes of seats of administrative capitals have also been occurring since 1984. Higher rates of population increases occur in towns that are set up as new administrative centers, while towns that ceased to be seats of administration may experience lower rates. No information in population changes in this respect was obtained, and this has not been taken into account during the preparation of this report. All the population figures that appear in the report are obtained on the assumption that all towns will experience the same rate of growth. Thus, caution should be taken when using population size figures of such towns.

In this report the towns within an awraja are presented according to their population sizes. However, the capital city of the awraja always appears first. The capital cities of administrative or autonomous regions are identified with a double asterisk. The names of the towns that were not covered in the census and have no sources of population estimates are not given in the tables. However, in the case of awraja capitals their names are presented followed by an asterisk. In cases where there are two or more towns in an awraja, totals for all towns are also presented.

Massive resettlement activities from drought affected and densely populated areas of the country to more fertile and less densely populated areas have also occurred since the undertaking of the 1984 census.

The present report makes use of the results of some studies, carried-out after the census, to adjust the population size estimates obtained during the 1984 National Population and Housing Census. However, apart from the adjustment for the resettlement program, population sizes of the rural areas were derived from the assumption that all areas will experience similar rates of growth.

The report also presents the population of the country classified by sex, age and rural-urban areas (Annex Table 1). The percentage age distribution by sex of rural and urban areas is presented in Annex Table 2. The percentage age distribution is obtained from the population that was covered during the census. This percentage age distribution may be used to generate a rough approximation of the age distribution of the population of regions, awrajas and towns. Finally, a map of the country that indicates the boundaries of the regions and their awrajas is presented at the end of the report.
